1 Statement from the Chair

One of the things that I am most proud of is how our department operates as a learning community where we all contribute to the whole. Faculty, staff, and our students each have unique skills and professional experiences, and our willingness to share and support one another helps the community advance.

This year, we worked to transition back to our offices and classrooms, establishing new post-pandemic teaching, learning, and research methods. Along the way, we welcomed back many of our beloved traditions, including networking events and in-person graduation. A few of the many department highlights include the implementation of our first alumni giving campaign and our new leadership role in undergraduate public health education.

Academics

Enrollment in the M.P.H. program continued on a positive trend. Fifty-one M.P.H. students enrolled during the 2021-2022 academic year, and the program graduated 18 students. The department held an in-person graduation recognition ceremony to celebrate our students' accomplishments at the end of the Spring 2022 semester. Families and friends attended the celebration, making the event special for all attendees.

Faculty continued to develop new undergraduate experiences in public health. This year, we added two new interactive undergraduate classes. Disease Detectives used a case study method to introduce students to infectious disease epidemiology while Community Health Improvement explored local trends in population health outcomes with a focus on health equity. The faculty also worked with colleagues from the Colleges of Liberal Arts and Science and Mathematics to design interdisciplinary undergraduate degree programs.

Scholarship and Giving

The department also continued to increase the number of students receiving a scholarship or other financial support. We held our first alumni giving campaign during the Wright Day to Give and doubled the size of the scholarship fund created by Mr. Ken Dahms. The Boonshoft Public Health Workforce Scholarship grew in awareness and interest, receiving inquiries from employees of eleven county health districts. Three new PHWF scholarship recipients were announced for Fall 2022, bringing the total awardees to nine. In addition, two of our students received Graduate Tuition Scholarships, and two others received a scholarship from the Greene County Foundation (awarded to public health students who graduated high school in Greene County). Another student was awarded a Wright Fellowship from the Graduate School.

Research

The faculty and staff of the department's research centers conducted work in substance use, behavioral health, and disabilities. The research teams directed 19 grants totaling over $2.7 million in annual expenses and made 15 national, state, and local presentations. Research faculty continued to take more active roles in the education center, including co-teaching courses and supervising student research capstones. In addition, the department was able to fund a graduate research assistant to support their research efforts.

Looking forward, the department has established two strategic initiatives – to grow enrollment and opportunities in undergraduate public health education and rebuild the funded work of the Center for Treatment, Interventions and Research. These initiatives build upon strengths in the department, our public health expertise and a 30+ year history of extramurally-funded substance use research.
