The Journal of the American Medical Association (JAMA) – Medical Education Theme Issue (December)

This theme issue on medical education, published in December, invites authors to submit manuscripts related to all aspects of the educational process. The journal is particularly seeking studies that either incorporate the most relevant educational outcomes (effects on clinical practice and patient care, rather than measures of knowledge, skills, or attitudes) or address better techniques for their measure.

Recent articles in JAMA have addressed the relationship between education and medical decision making; the effects of stress on trainees and clinicians; models for providing incentives to faculty for teaching; career choices and the physician workforce; the Internet and professional behavior; education in evidence-based medicine; methods, quality, and funding of medical education research; effects of communication skills; teaching quality improvement; diversity in medical education; cross-cultural care; changes in resident work hours and patient mortality, patient safety, and physician health; inaccuracy of physician self-assessment; and the effects of the Internet on education. While these remain of interest, other potential topics include (but are not limited to) continuing professional development, physician reentry programs, the appropriate use of medical literature, and the use of interdisciplinary approaches to learning. Given the role of educator that is played by all physicians, the journal is also interested in studies of the effectiveness of training physicians to be teachers, if these studies are conducted with methodological rigor and include important objective outcome measures.

The journal will consider all original research papers, systematic reviews, and scholarly commentaries addressing medical education, including randomized trials, high-quality observational studies, evidence-based reviews, and presentation of novel methodologies. The effects of medical education at the student, physician, patient, and societal levels are all appropriate for consideration. As with all research published in JAMA, studies must meet the highest standards for validity and generalizability; preference is given to studies that include large sample sizes and multiple study sites.
